Later, the California Coastal Act of 1976 established the Commission as a permanent state agency with a mission to protect, maintain, and enhance the quality of the coastal environment. One of the Commission's principal goals is to maximize public access and public recreational opportunities along the coast in a manner consistent with environmental preservation. The California Coastal Access Guide, which was created with the objectives in mind, will prove indispensable to anyone with a desire to explore the magnificent diversity of California's beaches. Introduction Nowadays, I encounter more and more people that are interested in, what we like to summarise broadly as BDSM. Some people are only starting out, while others have been dabbling in kinky activities for a while. Others again have a long history and a lot of knowledge in everything from bondage to domination, from sadism to masochism. All of them have in common that they are trying to expand their experiences in one way or another. Most of them also have in common that, at some point, they are having a hard time coming up with new ideas on how to incorporate their needs and wants into their (sex-)life. The goal of this book is to give you ideas and inspiration, by depicting real-life scenarios, which will hopefully enable you to broaden your BDSM-repertoire. You will be able to learn from the experiences of others so you don't have to repeat their mistakes. Generally, much like in theatre, a 'scene' is jargon for a complete kinky encounter. It has a start and a finish, during which we play our part, with the goal of focusing on a kinky act and connection with a partner or yourself. Some people like to incorporate scenes into their play that can take a long or indefinite amount of time. This is often referred to as power exchange and can include the setting of rules for a partner which are meant to be followed constantly. Some of the scenes discussed in this book are my own experiences, some are anecdotes from fellow kinksters and friends, and some are entirely made up. All of the real-life-people have agreed to be featured here, but of course, I have omitted and changed names and sometimes even genders, as well as details of every story to protect their identity. Whenever we engage in something as potentially dangerous as BDSM it is important to address the issue of safety: For anyone new to the topic of BDSM it can be quite a daunting task. Not just performing the actual act(s) of BDSM, but getting through the ample amount of information that is already available can have you tied in knots before you're even tied in knots. Nonetheless, it is an essential first step to have a safe and satisfying experience for every person involved. You shouldn't solely rely on someone else to show you the ropes. Instead read as much as you can, listen to podcasts, watch videos, and meet like-minded people to exchange experiences and thoughts. Furthermore, we should keep in mind that every person and every relationship is different, with different inclinations, wishes, and circumstances that will determine which parts of this book are relevant to you. Some of the scenes discussed here may require a specific kind of genitalia, but a lot of them can hopefully be adapted to whatever you may have at hand. Other scenes will include toys and items that most of you will likely have at home or things that can easily be acquired at most supermarkets for little money or in nature for free. Some are very intricate and might require specialized equipment and facilities. Bear in mind that not all ideas in this book will appeal to you or your partner. Different whips and strokes, for different kinky folks. There is also some discussion of potentially triggering content where boundaries were crossed and things didn't work out the way they were supposed to. While I don't endorse any of the negative behavior, I thought it important to include, so that others may learn from those bad experiences. There is no real order or categorization to the scenes, since most things in here defy categorization anyway. What you might consider to be humiliating, might be the opposite for someone else. What might be a punishment for them, might be a reward for you. So the headlines and categories are really nothing but suggestions and impressions from the people involved, and I encourage you to take, and leave, and interpret whatever you find in here in whatever way suits you. For anyone who has read my other book in this series, this safety section might be familiar. The following section about ground rules will be as well, but I think it's important to repeat the basics once in a while, no matter if you are a beginners or an experienced kinksters.

Ground Rules It is important to establish some ground rules before play actually begins, so we can learn about each other's boundaries, limits, potential health concerns, and also goals for your special kind of arrangement. In case you're a veteran in the BDSM-scene and your relationship is already well established this section might not be as interesting for you as for someone still new to all of this. Feel free to skip it, or keep on reading and repeat some basics. I promise to keep it as short as possible. When first starting out with a new partner, it is important to establish some ground rules before you actually engage in any kind of play. This includes, but is not limited to:- discussing personal kinks and fetishes- discussing personal boundaries and limits- discussing health concerns- discussing the form of the relationship. This negotiation will determine if you and your partner(s) are compatible enough, what kind of compromises each of you has to accept, or whether you are better off looking for someone else. Before you have this negotiation, each partner should take a BDSM-Kink-Test that you share with each other. You can find various tests if you just google "BDSM-Kink-List". At the time of the publishing of this book (09/2020), the best one I know of is available under \(\). You want to make sure the specific test lets you choose between all kinds of possible kinks, instead of asking you multiple choice questions about whether you think you're a sub or a switch. This test will give you a fairly comprehensive, albeit incomplete, list of things you absolutely need in a D(om)/s(ub) relationship, things you are interested in trying, things you might want to try, things that are off-limit at the moment and things that are a hard limit for you. Once you have determined that you and your partner are compatible concerning your kinks and would like to proceed with your LDR, you should also talk about possible health concerns (such as allergies, phobias, traumas, etc.) that might limit which things you can safely do. Lastly, you should discuss the form your relationship takes. By this, I don't necessarily mean if you are monogamous or not (although you should talk about that, too). I am more thinking about the degree to which your relationship is allowed to infringe upon your daily life. As certain BDSM-arrangements can come with fairly severe forms of control as well as psychological and physical consequences, it is important to establish some clear ground rules beforehand. For example, it might be important for someone working a conservative office job to not have visible bruising or markings. Others might have children at home, which might impact the amount of time one can invest in the dynamic. A lot of people choose to assign certain tasks to either the Dom(me) or the sub, and oftentimes with this come rewards for a job well done or punishments for lack of success. Generally, I have found that positive reinforcement works better than punishment but each dynamic is different, of course. Make sure to communicate all of those things beforehand, or whenever they come up during your relationship. This can be part of your play but I think it is important to do this outside of your designated roles to ensure you are both on equal footing when negotiating. There is no bossing around or punishing when discussing something as important as hard limits, for example. Also, if you decide to reenact any ideas from this book, they should be discussed with all parties involved to guarantee informed consent from everyone. As with a lot of things, it might make sense to move a little slower at the beginning. People need time to get used to new routines and some of the following ideas can be quite time-consuming. Use your best judgment when implementing new things.

Scene 1 Backstory: This was my first BDSM relationship. We broke up when I found out he had been cheating on me for I don't know how long. We had explored a lot during our 2-year relationship and I was very, very attached to him. Probably too much. This was exacerbated by the fact that we had played around with conditioning. It was his idea and in my naivety, I went along with it. For 2 years he had trained me to only be able to cum upon his permission. So now I was not only heartbroken and single, I also wasn't able to achieve climax. Neither on my own nor with other partners. Scene: After getting some professional help, I started exploring BDSM-sex with myself. To be honest, I wasn't even aware that solo-play was a thing until then. What I did, at the advice of my therapist, was to recondition myself to a different cue that would allow me to orgasm. I tried several things until I was able to finally do it. I started with a voice recording of myself, telling me when to cum. The recording was about 30 mins long and it would instruct me on when to do what. This was unsuccessful as I am notoriously distrustful of myself, I guess. Next, I tried using a clicker. I would pleasure myself with a vibrator and once I felt I was getting close I would make the clicking noise as a stand-in for the permission. It didn't work at the beginning and I was close to asking a friend of mine with a similar voice to my ex to make a recording for me, saying the same things my ex would usually say. Luckily, I only needed some more time, desperation, and a few glasses of wine to eventually accomplish it myself using the clicker method. Nowadays, I can come by consciously giving myself permission in my mind. I actually like it this way. It makes for a more conscious experience for me most of the time. Things that worked well: Reconditioning allowed me to finally orgasm again. As a nice side effect, I dived into the world of solo-play. Instead of looking for a new Dom, I looked for longer whips that would comfortably allow me to whip myself. Things that didn't work well: I was too blue-eyed in my early years. I still like the idea of conditioning but I think it's essential that the cue is not connected to something that can't immediately be replaced. People break up all the time and even if you don't, there's still a chance your partner might die and leave you not only a grieving mess but a grieving mess that can't climax. So if I ever were to engage in conditioning again I would go with the clicker from the beginning

Scene 2 Backstory: I am a bit of a romantic and I love making personalized presents. So it was only natural that I wanted to make a really meaningful one for my sub. She is someone who likes to please me in every way possible. Cock worship as well as cum play are among our favourite things to do. Scene: I found a kit online that allows you to dehydrate breastmilk and then turn it into a necklace. I ordered one of those kits and instead of breastmilk, I used my sperm. I dehydrated it and cast it in resin. The necklace turned out beautifully. It looks like a little pearl from an oyster. Things that worked well: It was surprisingly easy to do and my girlfriend loved it. It's a very unique present that she can wear in public and nobody would know its significance. Things that didn't work well: Other people may unknowingly touch my cum if they touch the necklace.

Scene 3 Backstory: My wife is called Alexa. Once we got that dreadful piece of technology from Ebook Tops and tried it out for a couple of days, it was only natural to do the thing everyone in my situation would have done. My human Alexa is a big fan of being objectified and used for my pleasure. Scene: So I started giving her commands the same way I would with the machine. First, it was a joke but we kept doing it because we both enjoyed it. While sitting on the couch I would say "Alexa, bring me a beer." Both Alexas would answer but only one would actually deliver the beer. After a while, I disconnected the virtual Alexa and made my wife sit in its place. I got her a yoga pillow and put it on the TV console where she would sit and meditate. Until I would give her a command that is. Then she would snap back to reality and either answer my question or do what I told her to. Things that worked well: My wife had been interested in meditation for quite some time but never really engaged in it other than during her yoga class. So this gave her a chance to slow down and relax from her stressful day job. It went as far as her not even answering unless her name was called first. I enjoyed looking at her instead of the TV and having a personal assistant who could do things for me that the virtual assistant is not capable of is very handy. Things that didn't work well: I can't think of anything that didn't work about this idea. We discussed it beforehand and made sure we would both enjoy it, just like we do with all scenes. It was always her call on how long she would sit on her pillow. Sometimes, I would come home in the evening and she was already sitting there, meditating. Once she felt like she had enough, she would get up and the scene would end.
